Energy Express Classroom News

The theme for week five was “Community Week” students spent the entire week learning about their communities. Students talked about their favorite room, different type of homes, siblings, pets, parents, and many other things about their home place. In art class children drew pictures of their dream homes, and created models of their homes.

Two of the classrooms decided to step things up a little. One group of children put on a puppet show and the other group hosted a play from last week’s book of the week called “Big Al”.

The students also got a big surprise this week when West Virginia State Trooper’s Smith and Raynor came to read in each of the student’s classrooms. They also brought with them a small helper to see that everything was properly read. The Energy Express book of the week for the younger students was “I Wanna New Room” by Karen Orloff. The older students read the book “At 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue” by Crystal Wirth.

Thanks again to all of the Wonderful Volunteers who make The Energy Express Program a huge success.
